Elevation | Cards

Depth is used to draw focus to an experience and add a physical materiality to the app. Shallow levels are reserved for items that are closely connected to the canvas or view, such as tiles. Deeper levels create a prominent frame around the surface, drawing strong focus to self-contained experiences like dialogs.

Yammer's redesign uses Level 1, 3 and 4.

Dialogs

Dialogs are temporary, modal UI overlay that generally provide contextual app information or require user confirmation/input. In most cases, Dialogs block interactions with the web page or application until being explicitly dismissed, and often request action from the user. They are primarily used for lightweight creation or edit tasks, and simple management tasks.

Modals

Modals are temporary, modal UI overlay that generally provide contextual app information or require user confirmation/input, or can be used to advertise new app features. In most cases, Modals block interactions with the web page or application until being explicitly dismissed. They can be used for lightweight creation or edit tasks and simple management tasks, or for hosting heavier temporary content.

Panels

Panels are modal UI overlays that provide contextual app information. They often request some kind of creation or management action from the user. Panels are paired with the Overlay component, also known as a Light Dismiss. The Overlay blocks interactions with the app view until dismissed either through clicking or tapping on the Overlay or by selecting a close or completion action within the Panel.

Left Nav

Navs (also called "left nav" or "navigation pane") provide links to the main areas of an app or a site. In large configurations, the Nav is always on-screen, usually on the left of the view. In smaller configurations, the Nav may collapse into a skinnier version or be completely hidden until the user taps an icon.

Calendar

The calendar component allows a user to browse through a calendar and pick a date value.

Dropdown | Underline + Icon

A Dropdown is a list in which the selected item is always displayed. Selecting the dropdown displays the list, closing a drop-down button. They are used to simplify the design and make a choice within the UI. When closed, only the selected item is visible. When users click the drop-down button, all the options become visible. To change the value, users open the list and click another value or use the arrow keys (up and down) to select a new value.

It was a real pleasure to participate on the Employee Listening Tour the past few weeks.

It was really important for me to meet with so many of you to understand the areas in which we need to improve in order to make for a more healthy work environment here at Contoso Electronics.

Keep the great feedback coming!

Great question. The way we are approaching updates to the guidelines is to elicit input from every team on the best way to go about updating the standards.
